Junction Australia tenant leads the way in local community

A Junction Australia Community Housing resident is making a positive impression by becoming a true leader and pivotal member of the Mitchell Park community.

Ron Fleet, a trusted neighbour and friend amongst the community, not only assists in the common garden maintenance in the area, but has also raised his concerns about people speeding in his street, which is very close to two schools, and pot holes in the road.

Encouraged by Junction Australia, Ron took it upon himself and reported his concerns to Marion City Council, and within a month there was a new 'slow' sign and a brand new sealed road.

"I wanted to ensure everyone in the community felt safe, so I thought it was important to do something about the problem," Mr Fleet said.

Junction Australia CEO Maria Palumbo said it's terrific to hear how Ron impacted his community. "

"We have many fantastic tenants who take pride in their place, and really care about their neighbourhoods. This is a great example of community leaders taking ownership of their spaces through building relationships with their neighbours, as well as Junction Australia as their housing provider, and their local council, the City of Marion," she said.

Junction Australia has over 30 years' experience assisting people who are socially or economically disadvantaged to access affordable places to call home.

"Junction Australia plays a critical role as a community anchor by working collaboratively to provide social infrastructure and connection to services that empower our tenants and the broader community to create safe, vibrant and sustainable places to live, learn, work and play," Ms Palumbo said.

"Providing outstanding service to our tenants and other customers is at the core of what we do."
